

What's right and what's wrong

Do you believe what you read? Because it may not be true because you read it or somebody wrote it. It only matters is your thought and ideology on the topic. Let me disclosure the topic in detail.

Any of you remember the mythological stories which we read on our festival or relevantly implying which were the history of us in which lord Ganesh has cursed lord moon for laughing on him where in other context it is said that lord Parvathi cursed not Ganesh. Out of both the context which is true. It is unprovable because we are not having the viewer or the original script on contrast we are having only the topic that we read and we believe the story which we like or the great author among the both which brings the conclusion that we don't want to know what's wrong or what's right, we just want to know what we like and believe it.

Let me give a rational example from the same mythology of Mahabharata where a great battle was fought and many of the readers have read it or saw it on television shows and we might think it is correct nevertheless it may not be entirely true. The original scripts were rewritten by the people in their own interest but the actual one is vanished in thin air. We believe in the present world that Karan who is a role player in the mythology is non imminently accused on the terms that he picked the bad side due to relentless situations where the original script may be written in a slight manner as he chose the side as he had grudge on the opposite. But we all believe what we like.

In the whole context what would be the actual reason for this??

It's simple that we are taught of irrelevant information nevertheless the false stories which makes us think that we are always good. It is not only in the context of mythology even in the history Bhagat Singh and many other leaders were portrayed as terrorists where they were the real fighters and the cowardly people are made up in front as the heroes which is completely irrelevant. This made the children to think that they are been growing in a prosperous society where fortunately they are being turned into slaves or immature without their consent.
